SYNOPSIS

When two kids witness the fatal loss of their parents in an accidental and freaky moment, both kids (Arnold and his sister Sharon) are left emotionally scared for life. Both grow up taking care of their needs without further parental care. As time past, the territory became off limits to the outside world and Arnold will protect what is theirs.
Jake, a former member of the police force and now investigator is hired to look into a company staff that went off the grid. Unfortunately, Jake's sister and her friends have made last minute plans to go exploring and camp out. Jake come finds out about this and the material he dug up about the location is a concern with a history of missing folk, ironically the same as his client has him investigate.

Jake puts a small task team of friends together and journey in search of his sister.
Of cause by now, the blood of company staff has spilt to the ground. This is just another repeated case of history and revenge of psychological damaged individuals defending their own space. All said, this insane chaos reaches a new record when Jake's sister and friends set camp and explore Bloodwood Forest. What turns out as the beginning of a good time out quickly becomes a nightmare and help comes a bit too late. It's pretty much a case survival against the odds.

However, Jake pitches up with the client. But this isn't a breather to the surviving victims as the intensity of violence will raise the game. In a game of survival despite Jakes loss of his sister before meeting his end, Penny, Jake's police friend arrives with reinforcement will partially balance the fight, but again with continues loss Penny balances the odds in ending the life of one killer, however, the second will set the unforgivable end and leave an uncertain fate to its next victims in a potential sequel.
