

HANDICAP STALL

Written by

Xavier Gonzalez

Based on

An awkward true story

INT. BATHROOM

GUY enters the bathroom. He lifts a pair of SUNGLASSES on top of his head to get a good look around. The bathroom is empty. He makes his way to the stalls.

He stops. Examines the difference between the normal stall and the handicap stall.

He takes another quick look around before choosing the handicap stall.

INT. HANDICAP STALL -- CONTINUOUS

Guy enters the stall and settles in. It's nice and spacious.

He pulls out his phone to get comfortable.

That's when we hear the DOOR OPEN.

Guy acknowledges this but pays it no mind.

And that's when we hear the SQUEAKING.

Guy lowers his phone and looks through the bottom opening of the stall to see the WHEELS OF A WHEEL CHAIR inching towards the handicap stall door.

The person in the wheel chair tries to open the stall door but obviously it's locked.

GUY

Uh--

He stops himself from saying anything. Instead he's trying to be invisible.

A beat.

The wheelchair starts to roll away backwards.

Are they leaving?

Guy let's out a quiet sigh of relief.

The he hears the DOOR of the next stall over opening.

From the opening at the bottom of the stalls he can see the wheel chair trying to squeeze into the smaller stall.

Guy is mortified at this point.

The guy in the wheel chair is struggling.

He tries harder and harder to squeeze into the stall until he completely spills out of the chair.

Now on the floor wheel chair guy can clearly see guy sitting on the handicap toilet.

Guy is frozen with fear. What does he do?

A beat, then... he flicks his head forward causing the sunglasses to fall back on his face.

GUY (CONT'D)
(pretending to be blind)
Is somebody there?

CUT TO BLACK.