SHOPPING CART

By

STEVEN BURTON

mailto:sburton900@gmail.com

Copyright © 2019
EXT. URBAN RESIDENTIAL STREET - MORNING

On a bright spring morning, a row of affluent Brownstones appear.

EXT. STAIR STEPS

They lead up to the front door of a manicured home.

INT. KITCHEN

JAN CLINTON, a casually well-dressed elderly woman with purse in hand, exits through a door outside and then locks it.

EXT. STORAGE SPACE

Jan approaches under stair steps, and then opens the lattice door to look for something familiar.

INT. STORAGE SPACE

Garden tools along with other outdoor objects are inside.

With instant frustration, she rushes away.

EXT. FRONT STEPS

Jan looks around and then moves quickly on the path next to the front steps towards the street. She focuses on something nearby.

EXT. SIDEWALK

In front of Jan’s home, CHARLEY EVANS, a disheveled man reaches down into a fold able shopping cart.

JAN

That’s my shopping cart! Give it back!

Charley turns.
JAN
My cart is gone from behind my steps!
You took it! It’s mine and I need it!

Charley stands motionless.

From the cart, he takes a blanket, a ragged teddy bear, a small bag of cans, and then stuffs them into a large plastic bag. He walks away with the bag to leave the cart behind.

EXT. SIDEWALK
Charley walks down the street.

EXT. FRONT STEPS
Jan stands near the cart in which a wilted bouquet of flowers remains. She picks up the flowers and then waves them.

JAN
Do you want your flowers?

EXT. SIDEWALK
Charley walks off into the distance, but does not respond.

EXT. FRONT STEPS
Jan waves the flowers.

JAN (Louder)
Did you hear me? These flowers.

EXT. SIDEWALK
Charley continues without response.

EXT. FRONT STEPS
A confused Jan carefully puts the flowers on a step. She moves away with the cart.
EXT. SIDEWALK

Charley and Jan walk in opposite directions down the same street.

EXT. SIDEWALK

Jan pushes the cart with groceries inside.

A wobbling wheel causes her to stop for closer look, and then continues with irritation.

EXT. FRONT STEPS

She moves along the pathway next to them.

EXT. KITCHEN DOOR

Jan is shocked to see another cart like hers parked nearby.

INT. KITCHEN

A stunned Jan puts a bag of groceries on the table.

SUSAN, Jan’s middle-aged daughter, walks into the kitchen.

JAN
I forgot you borrowed my cart!

SUSAN
Ok, but I’m here now.

JAN
You don’t understand! I’ve been terrible!

An upset Jan speaks with Susan which seems to calm her.

Later, they share lunch at the table.

JAN
Excuse me, this is a strange day.
SUSAN
This is a rough time of the year when it happened. Thank God, we are still here for each other.

JAN
Yes.

INT. BEDROOM - LATER
Jan picks up a framed photograph of a man with a young girl and boy from a dresser. Then, she puts the photograph back.

INT. CLOSET
Jan takes a blanket from the shelf.

INT. KITCHEN
Jan puts the blanket on the table, takes money out of her purse, and then puts it in an envelope. The blanket gets wrapped around the envelope.

EXT. KITCHEN
Jan puts the blanket into the man’s cart with Jan’s cart in the background.

She pushes the cart away, and then stops suddenly to look back at her cart with a quick decision.

EXT. STORAGE SPACE
The cart is pushed into the storage space, and then the blanket is taken out.

EXT. KITCHEN
Jan puts the blanket into her cart, and then moves away with new vigor.

EXT. SIDEWALK
Jan pushes the cart.
EXT. PARK

Jan walks to be greeted by a variety of scenes.

EXT. CHURCH

A sign reads, “Our Savior Community Hall”

INT. COMMUNITY HALL

Jan enters with the blanket and envelope, and then looks around the room. Elderly people eat, converse, and play games.

She leaves her donations with a volunteer.

EXT. PARK

Jan walks with cart when something catches her attention.

EXT. BENCH

STEPHEN, a man in his thirties, sits in profile.

An excited Jan interrupts him.

    JAN
Danny? Is that you?

He turns to look at Jan.

    JAN
Oh no........

    STEPHEN
What?

    JAN
I thought you may have been someone else.

    STEPHEN
That’s ok, no problem. I hope you find him.
JAN
Yes, thanks. Hopefully, he is somewhere near.

EXT. SIDEWALK
Jan walks with the cart.

EXT. FLOWER SHOP
Jan leaves with flowers and a small plant in the shopping cart.

EXT. SIDEWALK
Jan walks in a daze when she notices Charley as he walks with a large plastic bag on the other side of the street.

EXT. CROSSWALK
Jan moves quickly across the street.

EXT. SIDEWALK
Jan catches up to Charley from behind.

JAN
Please sir, I have been trying to find you.

He turns towards her.

JAN
I’m sorry about this morning. I just assumed. They looked alike.

CHARLEY
Oh, all right.

JAN
Why didn’t you tell me it wasn’t mine?

CHARLEY
It could be yours, because I found it. And I thought you needed it more than me.
JAN
No, I have one. I forgot this morning that it was being borrowed. So, I’ll just empty out these things and then it’s yours again. Please?

CHARLEY
OK.

EXT. SIDEWALK
Jan and Charley walk together.

EXT. JAN’S HOME
Jan leads Charley on the path to the stairs.
She stops to take the plants and flowers out, puts them on the bench, and then points towards her empty cart.

JAN
Now go ahead and take mine. We’ll trade. The wheels are going bad on yours which is in the storage room.

CHARLEY
No, mine is fine.

JAN
Look, I can always get another one. It’s no problem. I don’t use it that much anyway.

CHARLEY
I can always get another one too.

JAN
Please, just take it. I’ve caused you a lot of trouble.
CHARLEY
You don’t have to pay for this. It’s just a mistake. It’s O.K. now. I don’t want yours. Unless of course, you really want mine.

JAN
All right, I want yours.

CHARLEY
No you don’t. You’re just trying to feel better.

JAN
No, I’m not!

CHARLEY
Yes, you are.

JAN
No, I haven’t felt better in a long time. Why are you doing this? Take my cart! Take your cart! Both of them!

CHARLEY
O.k., I’ll take this one.

JAN
Good! And don’t come back here again!

Jan begins to sob uncontrollably, and then sits down on the bench.

Charley walks towards the street with the cart as Jan continues to sob in the background. Just before the sidewalk, he stops and then turns to look back at her.

CHARLEY
Damn!

He leaves the cart, and then walks towards Jan.

CHARLEY
I forgot my things.
He picks up the bag off the ground.

After he looks at the upset Jan for a moment, he fumbles around in the bag to find a small package of Kleenex.

Charley sits next to Jan on the bench, and then offers some tissue.

    CHARLEY
    Here you go.

Jan takes the tissue to her eyes as she continues to sob as he remains seated next to her.

    JAN
    Come back.

    CHARLEY
    You want me back?

    JAN
    No, my son Danny.

    CHARLEY
    What happened?

    JAN
    He disappeared many years ago when he was a teen.

    CHARLEY
    I’m sorry about that.

    JAN
    We tried everything to find him. My husband died a few years ago. I understood that. But, I don’t understand what happened to Danny. He could still be alive, dead, crazy, sick, happy, sad...I didn’t get to know him. And maybe I caused this!
CHARLEY
But, you don’t know that. Maybe, it’s just one of those bad things that life throws at you. No rhyme or reason.

JAN
But, how and why?

CHARLEY
There is no answer, so maybe it would be better to let all these feelings go.

JAN
Where?

CHARLEY
I don’t know, but it ain’t doing any good here. (Pause.) Throw it up in the sky. Let it fly away.

JAN
Sometimes, I want to just fly away.

CHARLEY
I think we all do.

He reaches into the bag, and then takes out a small bottle of soda.

CHARLEY
This is all I have to offer right now. Why don’t you have a good swallow? Clear your throat. My name is Charley.

He opens the soda, gives it to Jan, and then she takes a careful sip.

JAN
Thank you, Charley. My name is Jan.