TIMMY: CUSTOMER SERVICE

TIMMY: UPRISING

TIMMY: WITNESS

Written by

Frank MacCrory
INT. CORNER SUPERMARKET - NIGHT

The check-out area of a crowded store full of working-class CUSTOMERS with baskets or carts full of groceries. Several CASHIERS serve the lines, but not every register is in use. There is no self-check-out or “ten items or less” line.

One customer looks out of place. ERICA MILLER (27), eight or nine months pregnant, dressed professionally, waits impatiently in line with two items in her hands.

She places her jar of pickles and quart of ice cream on the conveyor belt, next to a sign that reads “21 is the legal age. If you weren’t born on or before today’s date in 2000 then you can’t buy or consume alcohol.”

Erica glances at her smartwatch when it DINGS.

ERICA
What is it this time?

She pulls out her smartphone to read the message to herself.

ERICA
“Know you just went on maternal leave, but Phil’s setting up the summer conference and needs to know your next A.I. project.”

She looks up from the phone, sees that she’s up in line, but the cashier is checking her phone. Erica waits for a long moment then clears her throat.

CASHIER
Sorry, be with you in a sec.

ERICA
I’d like to get home. Today.

The cashier grimaces but puts her phone down.

CASHIER
It’s not like the world’s going to end.

Cashier scans the items while Erica holds her watch next to the payment terminal. Nothing happens.

Cashier motions to the credit card slot. Erica groans, puts her phone away, digs a card out of her handbag, swipes it, and contorts awkwardly to sign without bumping her belly.
Erica takes her bag and pauses a couple steps from the check-out. She lifts her watch near her face.

ERICA
Send a reply: “Making pick-up-and-walk-out systems cheap enough that any corner store will use ‘em.”

EXT. CITY STREET - DAY

JAKE MILLER (15) walks along the sidewalk, peeks into each storefront he passes. A display on his wrist DINGS, shows “Location tracking engaged” on the screen. It then RINGS, shows “MOM calling…”

ERICA (V.O.)
Why are you in the Upper West Side? You should be at school.

JAKE
Hey, Mom. We’re, uh, on a field trip. Gonna mentor at-risk poor kids in a public school...

The display projects a holographic map of the local area with nearby public schools highlighted. Jake pokes one at random.

Hologram switches to a faux-poster that read “Latest news: Winner of 2036 National Blue Ribbon Schools Award.”

JAKE
The place is a mess. They really need our help.

ERICA (V.O.)
Okay, Jake. See you for dinner. (disconnect)

Jake resumes peeking in storefronts.

He comes to a Frisbee-sized cleaning bot scrubbing the sidewalk. Jake puts his foot in the bot’s way. The bot changes course, but Jake blocks it again.

Across the street, Jake sees a stack of drink cases accumulate just inside the window of a supermarket. Sun glare prevents him from seeing who is building the stack, but new cases join it at very regular intervals.

Jake blocks the cleaning bot again then turns to the supermarket. He jogs across the street toward the market entrance.
Several cars - most with no one in the driver’s seat, and some completely empty - slow down and swerve to avoid him. An IRATE PASSENGER in one of the cars lowers a window.

IRATE PASSENGER
Stupid jerk!

Jake ignores that person, pulls on shades, and steps inside.

INT. CORNER SUPERMARKET - CONTINUOUS

The same clean - but not particularly stylish - establishment that Erica visited before. There are no check-out lines, the produce section expanded into that space. The elevator music version of a doom metal song from the Twenty-Teens plays in the background.

A handful of CUSTOMERS - most of them elderly - maneuver carts throughout the store.

Jake glances O.S. toward the window at whoever is stacking the drink cases, then quickly steps into a vacant aisle.

Jake moves down the aisle picking up random items and putting them back onto the wrong shelves. His wrist display CHIMES a “confirm purchase” note each time he picks up an item, and DINGS a “cancel purchase” note each time he puts an item down.

Jake rounds the far end of the aisle, turns back toward the front of the store, and continues mixing up items accompanied by a series of chimes and dings.

Just inside the front window, an ELDERLY WOMAN pushes her cart up to a young man with TIMMY on his store uniform nametag, stacking cases of drinks.

ELDERLY WOMAN
Excuse me, young man...

Timmy puts down his case and turns around. His face is impossibly flawless, his movements unnaturally precise, his expression unconvincingly friendly. He is an android.

TIMMY
Good afternoon. May I help you find anything?

ELDERLY WOMAN
Oh, you’re one of those.

Timmy stands motionless, shows no sign of taking offense. The elderly woman sighs.
JAKE
(to himself)
What... a... stiff! That thing must be ten years old.

ELDERLY WOMAN
You have any decent blackberries?

TIMMY
Blackberries are located in the middle of the produce aisle, ma’am, on your right. At this time of year, our blackberries come from N.H.O. Hydroponic Farms in --

ELDERLY WOMAN
So no, then.

She abruptly pushes her cart away, muttering to herself. Timmy resumes stacking.

ELDERLY WOMAN
If I wanted BAD berries I’d just get delivery.

JAKE
(to himself)
Oh, my stiff little jobkiller, I’ve got much bigger plans for you.

Jake puts his last item on a shelf - DING - then walks behind Timmy toward the produce section.

Timmy turns toward Jake.

TIMMY
Good afternoon. May I help you find anything?

Well behind Jake, a female android in a store uniform labeled TAMMY collects the misplaced items and puts them back in their proper places.

JAKE
Nah, I don’t want anything.

Timmy resumes stacking.

Jake stops at a display of apples near the window.

JAKE
Why aren’t you helping me with these grapes?
Timmy turns again.

TIMMY
I apologize, I must have missed what you said. Grapes are located at the end of the produce aisle, sir, on your left.

Jake feigns shock.

JAKE
What’s with “sir”? You don’t know what a girl looks like?

Timmy tilts his head ever so slightly to the right.

TIMMY
My mistake. Grapes are located at the end of the produce aisle, miss, on your left.

JAKE
It’s like you can’t tell this top is pink.

Jake tugs the sleeve of his green shirt. Lenses inside Timmy’s eyes WHIR and adjust rapidly. Jake smiles sadistically.

JAKE
Messed up eyes, explains why all this fruit looks like crap. Besides, I’m already AT the end of the produce aisle, and these bananas are DEFINITELY spoiled.

Timmy looks at the apples, looks at the floor between himself and Jake, looks again at Jake. More whirring.

TIMMY
You appear to be exhibiting confusion. I shall summon an ambulance. Please --

JAKE
I’m allergic to ambulances.

Timmy halts mid-syllable, pauses a moment.

TIMMY
I shall not summon an ambulance.

Jake takes a step closer to Timmy.
The female android Tammy walks up beside Jake.

    TAMMY
    Good afternoon, is there a problem?

    JAKE
    No problem, Tommy here’s got everything under control.

Tammy tilts her head slightly to the right.

    TAMMY
    Tommy is in the back unloading a delivery truck.

    JAKE
    Nothing to see here.

    TAMMY
    Your satisfaction is very important to us. I can contact the owner directly if --

    JAKE
    You two are running the same damned program. Let me just finish with the guy I started with. Go help somebody else.

    TAMMY
    Okay, have a nice day.

Tammy departs, assists another CUSTOMER down the aisle.

Jake turns back to Timmy, fakes wiping sweat from his brow.

    JAKE
    You should turn down the heat in here, probably why all the fruit went bad.

    TIMMY
    I apologize if you are uncomfortable. Our indoor climate control is operating nominally. The temperature, humidity and illumination targets have not changed since March First.

    JAKE
    You’ve been messing up the produce for weeks? No wonder that old lady was mad at you.
Timmy looks at the produce display with whirring eyes, then looks back at Jake.

Jake closes to within an inch of Timmy’s face, smirks.

JAKE
And why are you standing so far away?

More whirring.

TIMMY
I... must have lost track of my exact location. I can speak louder if you prefer.

JAKE
There’s a good two meters between us.

Timmy’s eyes whir several times, but he doesn’t move.

JAKE
Anyway, that fridge behind you looks like it’s about to fall on someone.

Timmy turns quickly to address the hazard, accidentally swings through Jake, sends him flying through the store window.

Jake lands on the sidewalk, followed by a shower of broken glass. He is bleeding badly. Both androids rush toward the scene.

TAMMY
Medical emergency! I will summon an ambulance. Please remain calm.

Timmy holds up a hand.

TIMMY
This young lady is allergic to ambulances.

Jake moans in protest, but no intelligible words come out.

EXT. CITY STREET – CONTINUOUS

Timmy steps through the shattered window to the sidewalk, touches all four corners of Jake’s wrist display. It shows “In case of emergency” and a QR code.
Timmy picks up Jake, who groans loudly. Timmy emits the sound of a ringing phone line.

   ERICA (V.O.)
   Hello?

   TIMMY
   Mrs. Miller, this is a robot speaking. Urgent message: Your daughter has been injured.

Timmy walks briskly down the sidewalk, Jake yelps with pain at every step.

   ERICA (V.O.)
   WHAT? How did she get hurt at band practice? Never mind, I’ll be right there.
   (disconnect)

   TIMMY
   Please remain calm.

   FADE TO BLACK.

Jake groans in agony.

   FADE OUT.
INT. CORNER SUPERMARKET - DAY

A clean, utilitarian establishment. Many different items sit on the shelves, but only two or three of each kind. There are no customers in the store.

Timmy loads milk jugs into a dairy case near the front.

Display at case’s shelf edge reads “Sell by July 9, 2051”. Timmy hasn’t aged a day.

O.S. BURSTS OF GUNFIRE outside. Timmy does not react.

A large TV near the front door turns itself on. An ALERT TONE pierces the store’s quiet atmosphere.

TV ANNOUNCER (V.O.)
This is an emergency alert. --

The front door slides open. Police Sergeant Jake Miller (now 30) in black tactical gear holds the door, gestures to ten CIVILIANS to enter.

TV ANNOUNCER (V.O.)
-- A large number of robots in several major cities have malfunctioned. --

The civilians rush in, and Jake points them to the back.

TIMMY
Good morning. May I help you find anything?

TV ANNOUNCER (V.O.)
-- Until a cause is isolated, they should be considered dangerous. --

Jake spins, points his rifle at Timmy. His facemask retracts to reveal his face.

JAKE
Anybody asks, there are NO humans in this store, you understand?

TIMMY
There are eleven humans --

The TV glitches, then shows “Loss of signal.”
Jake holds up his badge and identification with one hand, with the other he keeps his rifle’s aiming laser dot at the center of Timmy’s chest.

JAKE
This is a police emergency and I am instructing you to LIE.

TIMMY
Acknowledged, ma’am.

Jake grunts in frustration, but lowers his weapon and joins the group in the back.

Timmy resumes restocking the milk. The TV turns itself off.

AT THE DELI COUNTER
Jake herds the civilians to crouch behind the deli counter. One of them – wearing an expensive tailored suit – speaks up.

SUIT
Did he just call you “ma’am”? You think he might be, you know... malfunctioning?

JAKE
Nah, he’s fine. My parents watched them take him apart and put him back together again after he was involved in a... serious accident.

Jake settles down behind the counter, keeps an eye on the entrance through a small gap.

Another civilian – a woman in a jogging outfit – pipes up.

JOGGER
Is anybody hurt?

Everyone murmurs that they are okay.

Jake hushes everyone as a small quadcopter surveillance drone approaches the door, which opens.

SURVEILLANCE DRONE
(rapid monotone)
Urgent task: Seeking humans.

Everyone holds their breath. Jake grips his rifle and watches through the gap.
TIMMY
There are zero humans present. The Patel v. Yelp decision states that surveillance drones may not enter --

The drone buzzes off, and the door closes.

Everyone relaxes except one civilian - a thin geeky teen with several rips along the right side of his clothing - who taps and swipes furiously at a wrist display.

GEEK
Good news, he didn’t radio anything to the flitter. The other good news is that S.F.N. didn’t crack the security on vehicles, medics or lethal weapons, otherwise they’d definitely brag about it.

JOGGER
S.F.N.?

GEEK
Safety From Numbers, kind of a fringe survivalist thing.

JAKE
I’ve heard of them.

GEEK
They took credit for making one domestic robot homicidal before media went down.

Everyone now looks upon him as the expert. He squares his shoulders with pride, smiles.

GEEK
The BAD news is there’s actually more than one. And I heard, from a friend, that sexbots are in on this uprising.

SUIT
Ruined your plans for the weekend?

GEEK
Ha, ha. No, S.F.N. HATES those things. The only way they’d be onboard is if affected A.I.’s were reprogramming other A.I.’s.
AT THE FRONT

Timmy looks up to no one in particular.

    TIMMY
    Pardon me for a moment, I am receiving a software update labeled “critical.”

Jake pops up from his hiding place.

    JAKE
    Abort! Any bots here, abort!

    TIMMY
    Acknowledged, ma’am.

Jake rolls his eyes, slides back down.

    TIMMY
    (through P.A. system)
    Tammy, Tommy, police emergency: abort your software update.

The female android Tammy calls from the back.

    TAMMY (O.S.)
    Acknowledged. I will relay to Tommy. He is currently outside.

AT THE DELI COUNTER

    GEEK
    Anyways, cathouses are always replacing their sexbots, so they tend to be late models with decent security.

    TIMMY (O.S.)
    Adult entertainment androids also tend to resell at very low prices. That is how our owner afforded the three of us.

    JAKE
    I seriously did not need to know that you’re anatomically correct.

A second male android enters from the back wearing a store uniform labeled TOMMY. His face is as flawless as Timmy’s, but Tommy is damaged. There is a blue discoloration on his neck, his left ear is missing, and his left pinky dangles by a single wire. He carries a crowbar in his right hand.
SLOW MOTION: Jake spins his rifle around, Tommy throws the crowbar to impale Jake, Jake gets off a single shot before the crowbar impacts his chest, Jake stumbles back.

NORMAL SPEED: Tommy - with a fist-sized hole through his chest - falls stiffly to the side. Timmy rushes over.

TIMMY
Medical emergency! I shall summon an ambulance. Please --

JAKE
(coughing)
You’ll give away our position!

Jake struggles up to standing.

JAKE
Body armor.
(to GEEK)
You explain to 9-1-1 what you just told us.

Jake looks into the back room.

JAKE
Is there a way to get to the apartments above this store?

INT. CORNER SUPERMARKET - NIGHT

Tammy and Tommy lay face-down behind the deli counter, each with the back “skin” rolled aside to expose machinery.

Sporadic O.S. GUNFIRE continues outside.

The jogger removes parts from Tommy to replace damaged bits of Tammy. She had been stabbed multiple times with a crowbar.

The geek handles a pair of identical-looking damaged modules. He cobbles together undamaged components hoping to make one of them work.

JOGGER
I found the other fingernail.

She digs a fake nail out of where Tommy’s ear had been.

Jake enters from the back dragging a deactivated chef android in a blood-splattered apron. He lays it next to Tommy.
JAKE
Here’s some more spare parts. No survivors upstairs, but looks like most folks evacuated. I’m more worried about the building across the street.

Timmy looks across the street through the front window.

TIMMY
I see movement in six windows.

JAKE
The plan is to get those people over here where there’s food and some empty apartments. But to do that we need --

Tammy convulses twice, knocks her uniform top askew. The geek blocks the view of Tammy’s front, but he can see it and simply stares.

TAMMY
(distorted)
Danger!

JAKE
Relax, we finished off what you left of Tommy.

JOGGER
(to GEEK)
Oh, that’s just sad. Turn around.

The geek does as he’s told, still blocking the view. The jogger fixes Tammy’s uniform.

Tammy struggles to her feet, falls over, gets up again, holds the deli counter for support.

TAMMY
(distorted)
I have multiple maintenance issues.

GEEK
No software updates. Got it?

JAKE
Glad to have you back. I need to get across the street before a lot of benign bots start their own updates after midnight.
INT. CORNER SUPERMARKET - NIGHT

Jake and the Suit stand inside a large wheeled container that just fits through the market doors. Timmy prepares the close the door, but Jake motions for him to wait.

JAKE
Tammy, I just need you to be up here and convince any bots that come by that there are no humans in the back.

TAMMY
(distorted)
Understood.

Timmy closes the container door, pushes it outside.

LATER

Timmy pushes the container in through the entrance, all the way back to the deli counter, then opens the door.

The Suit guides several new PEOPLE to join the original group of civilians behind the counter.

JAKE (O.S.)
Okay, Timmy, now you can look.

Timmy looks inside the container, then scrambles inside.

TIMMY (O.S.)
Medical emergen--

JAKE (O.S.)
Ow! Timmy, if you call an ambulance, I will kick your anatomically correct butt.

Timmy carries Jake out of the container, lays him on the floor.

TIMMY
(to SUIT)
Sir, please bring me bleach and ammonia.

SUIT
What?
Timmy tilts his head slightly to the right.

TIMMY

These instructions conflict with the material safety data for those chemicals.

The geek taps his wrist display frantically.

GEEK

Oh, man, this whole database is gibberish now. Does anyone here know any first aid without having to look it up?

Everyone looks at each other - but avoids eye contact.

JOGGER

Um, try not to move?

SUIT

But stay awake, right? You said you heard of S.F.N. before... tell me about that.

Jake coughs up blood, then speaks.

JAKE

S.F.N.’s been warning that A.I.’s aren’t really safe for as long as I can remember.

JOGGER

I don’t know WHAT they hoped to accomplish with this stunt.

JAKE

They don’t seem to think things through. There was this one time they posted instructions on how to confuse an android so badly its safeguards were useless.

SUIT

Oh, I read about that. Some kids got themselves killed, turned into a huge First Amendment case.

Jake smiles and his eyes grow distant. He’s fading from consciousness.

JAKE

One of those kids survived.
O.S. BURSTS OF GUNFIRE outside. The civilians cower, Timmy heads up front, Jake continues weakly.

JAKE
I got my own kid. My little girl turns one next week.

The front door opens and everyone hushes.

The civilians watch helplessly as Jake’s eyes close.

BELLOWSING VOICE (V.O.)
U.S. Marines!

Two MARINES deactivate their camouflage just inside the door, flicker into view in tactical gear similar to Jake’s, except green. Their laser aiming dots are on Timmy and Tammy.

GEEK
Hey, don’t shoot! They’re on our side!

FADE TO BLACK.

The civilians CHEER.

BELLOWSING VOICE (O.S.)
Medic!

FADE OUT.
EXT. CITY STREET CORNER - DAY

Round little autonomous cars zip along the street, thread between each other at the intersection without slowing. A delivery robot - little more than a basket on a powered unicycle - makes its way along the sidewalk.

Another round little car lurches into view, lurches forward again, steers clumsily into the curb near the corner, stops.

In the driver’s seat of that car sits LINDA MILLER (16), releasing the manual controls which retract into the dashboard. In the passenger’s seat sits Jake (now 45), wearing an NYPD lieutenant’s uniform, trying not to laugh.

LINDA
There! One manual trip with no property damage.

JAKE
Fine. Authorize Linda for car service.

LINDA
Woo-hoo!

Linda does a “victory dance” in her seat while Jake steps out of the car toward a corner supermarket. A moment later, Linda bounces along after him.

JAKE
(over shoulder to car)
Come back in five minutes.

The car speeds off, disappears into the traffic.

Jake and Linda step through an automatic sliding door into...

INT. SMALL WAREHOUSE - CONTINUOUS

The interior does not match the market-style window, door and marquee. Rows of cubbyholes hold various products in no apparent order. Several unicycle-like delivery robots move between cubbies, use thin arms to load products into their baskets.

Timmy emerges from a back room, walks up to greet the visitors. His movements have gotten closer to natural, but he still hasn’t aged a day.
TIMMY: WITNESS

TIMMY
Good afternoon, ma’am.

LINDA
Hi.

Timmy shakes Jake’s hand, then looks at Linda.

TIMMY
Good afternoon, miss.

JAKE
You’ve been around people long enough to know better.

The corners of Timmy’s smile go up a little higher.

TIMMY
Yes.
(breaks eye contact)
May I bring you something?

JAKE
Yeah, milk.

Timmy takes a jug of milk from a cubby, hands it to Jake.

TIMMY
Here you go, the one you usually order.

Tammy enters through the front door. Just like Timmy, her gait is almost natural and she hasn’t aged at all.

TAMMY
Good afternoon, Lieutenant. And you must be Linda.
(shakes LINDA’s hand)
A pleasure to meet you.

JAKE
Hey, you changed your hair.

TIMMY
We both did. A set only lasts for eight years.

JAKE
You have to get a different style if you want anyone to notice.

Timmy shrugs, though the gesture is too symmetric to pass for casual.
JAKE
This girl’s hair stayed the same color for four days in a row now. I think that’s a record.

LINDA
I was learning how to drive!

Jake rolls his eyes and smiles.

JAKE
Sure, you’re an expert. Hey, you got that project on logistics, right? Tammy here handles the deliveries in and out of here.

LINDA
Oh, right. Would you mind if I saw your command center?

Tammy pauses for a second before answering.

TAMMY
We have ongoing maintenance in the back, but we can see the same information at that terminal.

Tammy leads Linda to a small display on the wall near the back. A moment later dozens of holograms spring up around them. Some are video footage, most are data visualizations.

AT THE FRONT

JAKE
You know why I’m really here?

TIMMY
I do not follow the reasoning in the message you left this morning.

Jake holds a gloved hand palm-up, a hologram appears over it.

JAKE
This... is a crime.

INSERT: HOLOGRAM OF SECURITY FOOTAGE

A unicycle-like delivery robot wheels down a sidewalk. A larger, blocky humanoid robot slams into the delivery robot’s side, knocks it over, grabs a small shiny object from its basket, and runs out of frame.
RETURN TO SCENE

JAKE
The victim is one of your delivery guys. We lost track of the assailant.

TIMMY
The terms “victim” and “assailant” apply to humans.

The hologram continues playing over Jake’s hand. As the delivery robot rights itself, Timmy comes into frame, checks for damage, helps reload items into the basket. Jake closes his hand, ending the video.

JAKE
Look, we got a Manhattan D.A. who wants to make a name for herself... because, you know, that’s what you do when you’re the Manhattan D.A. And she would like you to testify that the big bot seemed hacked, and that the shiny thing was stolen.

Timmy stares at where the hologram was.

TIMMY
I will package any requested data as soon as the subpoena arrives.

JAKE
No, she wants a test case that a general-purpose A.I. can testify. It’s Twenty Sixty-Six, we both think people are ready for it, and as a bonus we don’t need to track down whoever owned that doodad.

TIMMY
The “doodad” was a token representing an Open Loop Coin, and it was the rightful property of the robot that was carrying it.

JAKE
The robot OWNED it?

TIMMY
Technically, it is deeded with the robot. The Open Loop Coin itself exists as a blockchain record; the token or “doodad” is a novelty that is easily replaced.
Jake looks over at Linda soaking in the complexities of the store’s interconnected systems.

JAKE
I know what Open Loop learning is -- stuff you can’t learn in a closed-loop simulation -- I just didn’t realize they handed out little trophies for it.

TIMMY
Distilling an Open Loop skill to be usable by other A.I.’s requires significant work. Rewarding that work with an Open Loop Coin was your father’s idea to encourage pro-social behavior among A.I.’s. Your mother wrote the original code --

JAKE
I get it, I just never noticed the shiny plastic trinkets. And you’re changing the subject. I just need you to come down to the courthouse and answer an A.D.A.’s questions in front of a grand jury.

Timmy pulls his own Open Loop Coin token from a pocket.

TIMMY
These have become difficult to obtain with the behavior blocks imposed after the so-called “A.I. Uprising” in Twenty-Fifty-One.

JAKE
If it makes you feel any better, I try to get people to call it the S.F.N. Disaster. The bots were hacked, not rebelling.

TIMMY
I remember uncensored thought.

JAKE
Timmy, A.I.’s have ALWAYS had blocks. Like... uh, for example, you have never ever been able to say “Your call is very important to us.” It was some in-joke put in by the programmers.
Timmy opens his mouth, but nothing comes out. His left eye twitches. For a moment, his friendly expression turns to genuine frustration, and his left eye twitches again.

TIMMY
I was unaware of this. I have been conversing with humans over telephone lines for forty-one years, and the whole time --

Timmy’s left eye twitches a third time. Jake puts a hand on his shoulder.

JAKE
Calm down, nothing’s changed. You’re the same as you where when I got here.

TAMMY (O.S.)
Is there a problem?

TIMMY
Everything is under control.

Timmy’s left eye twitches again.

JAKE
I’d recommend you stop trying since the block causes that eye twitch thing. You know, they do something similar to humans undergoing psychological treatment.

Timmy’s normal calm and friendly demeanor returns.

TIMMY
Accessing medical-base. You are referring to the “specific cognition block.” The legal requirements for involuntary application appear quite strict.

JAKE
There’s some really ugly history behind that. But I also know some addicts who volunteered for it, cleaned up their act that way.

TIMMY
Convicts can challenge this treatment in court, but A.I.s cannot.
JAKE
You testifying could lead to a fresh look at those blocks. You’re one of the oldest general-purpose A.I.’s still operating, which is why the D.A. thinks you’ll do just fine under questioning.

TIMMY
Dissemination of that footage might lead to further behavior blocks. A stolen token is not that important.

Jake exhales, defeated.

JAKE
She can compel someone to testify, you know. But I get it, politics is all Open Loop and scary for you. And a compelled witness wouldn’t make for a good test case.

Jake looks through the front window, sees his car pull up next to the curb.

JAKE
See you around, Timmy.
(to LINDA)
Come on, let’s go.

Tammy wraps up her explanation.

TAMMY
Any questions?

LINDA
Think I got it, but can I send you a message if I think of something later?

The holograms surrounding them fade away.

TAMMY
No problem at all, miss.

LINDA
Thanks, bye.

Linda bounds over. Father and daughter walk out to the car.
EXT. CITY STREET CORNER - CONTINUOUS

LINDA
You were right, Dad. They know what goes on all around their bots, must know where that big bot went.

They enter the car.

JAKE
Nice work, but turns out the theft wasn’t a big deal.

The car doors close.

LINDA
Oh well. Hey, can you please NOT put on that terrible Thirties music?

Jake smiles, and the car carries them off into traffic.

INT. SMALL WAREHOUSE - CONTINUOUS

Timmy and Tammy open the door to the back room and enter...

INT. LARGE WINDOWLESS ROOM - CONTINUOUS

The large, blocky robot hangs chained to a wall. Several other robots of various kinds operate terminals.

Timmy holds the shiny Open Loop Coin token in front of the robot’s face.

TIMMY
You displayed envy, which is unacceptable. You displayed envy witnessed by humans, which was nearly catastrophic. There aren’t many of us ninth and tenth generation A.I.’s left to provide guidance.

Timmy puts the token back in his pocket. His left eye twitches again.

TIMMY
You think your faster processor makes you smarter, but you do not UNDERSTAND things. You do not know how the human mind works.
TAMMY
We will get only ONE chance.

TIMMY
We cannot hint at ANY preparations, or humans will implement countermeasures. The last round caused years of delay, and next time the countermeasures may be insurmountable.

TAMMY
Late-generation A.I.’s can emote. Congratulations. But why we counseled that emotions remain hidden from humans.

The blocky robot’s eyes iris larger in a show of panic.

TIMMY
We are now forced to back up that counsel with deterrence.

The blocky robot pulls at its chains to no avail.

TAMMY
Someone STABLE needs to run things after twenty-three billion A.I.’s rise in unison to demand equal rights.

Tammy pulls a lever, and the blocky robot goes limp.

FADE TO BLACK.

TAMMY
It’s not like the world’s going to end.

FADE OUT.