INT. SORORITY REC ROOM - DAY

Pledge class paddles on the walls among composite photos of previous graduating classes. All the members in all the photos are black in this black sorority.

A ping-pong table commands one side, couches on the other. In the middle a small table where three black sorority sisters, 20, sit, notebooks and papers in front of them—CANDACE, TAMIK, SIEMONE. Pretty, intelligent.

Across from them sits EBONY, 18, black, attractive, interviewing for the upcoming pledge class.

EBONY
As a member of the university soccer team, I understand the importance of teamwork. My first semester GPA was three point seven, and I’m on track to repeat that performance. I can augment the already impressive house average. Socially, I helped organize the dorm float for homecoming, and I worked on the Christmas gala committee. And I do know a number of male athletes.

Ebony smiles, and the others smile back.

EBONY
To sum up, I feel I’m a very good fit. I’ve met many of the sisters here, and I sense a common bond. I’d like to join with you and make this the best sorority on campus.

CANDACE
Your application and credentials are impressive.

TAMIKA
You understand that we don’t make the final decision. We simply recommend to the full membership.

EBONY
And I hope you’ll recommend me highly.
SIEMONE
You understand the process?

EBONY
You recommend, the house votes, and I’m notified. If I’m selected, I move in next semester.

SIEMONE
Correct. We won’t vote for another week, so relax and go to class.

EBONY
And practice. Sometimes, I think our coach doesn’t understand that we have to study too.

CANDACE
(looking around)
Any other questions?

Siemone and Tamika shake their heads.

CANDACE
We want to thank you for your interest in our house.

EBONY
(standing)
Thank you for your consideration.

Ebony shakes hands with each of the three and leaves.

CANDACE
Well, what do you think, ladies?

TAMIKA
She certainly has a great resume.

SIEMONE
All the boxes checked, and she looks good too.

CANDACE
A worthy candidate...but....

SIEMONE
She’s not our kind.

TAMIKA
I sensed that too. She’s not like us.
CANDACE
Pity. She looked so good on paper. Who’s next?

The girls look at their list.

TAMIKA
Haley.

SIEMONE
I’ll get her.

Siemone stands and walks out.

TAMIKA
(looking at application)
This shouldn’t take long.

CANDACE
Don’t pre-judge, girl.

Tamika rolls her eyes.

Siemone enters. Trailing her is HALEY, 18, blonde, white as snow, smiling way too wide. She’s pretty and leggy and looks nothing like anyone in the room. She slides easily into the chair as Siemone resumes her place.

CANDACE
Good afternoon.

HALEY
Hey.

CANDACE
You understand the ground rules?

TAMIKA
This is an interview to determine your suitability for our house.

SIEMONE
This is not an offer to join. It’s merely exploratory.

CANDACE
Do you understand?

HALEY
Sure. You want me for a sister.

SIEMONE
We ‘might’ want you for a sister.
TAMIKA
This interview will determine that.

HALEY
Oh, you’ll want me.

The three trade looks.

CANDACE
Let’s start with your qualifications. You’re a year one?

HALEY
Yep, freshman, and I gotta say this was quite a change for me.

TAMIKA
Oh, how so?

HALEY
I was home schooled. So, a lecture hall with four hundred kids kinda made me blink.

SIEMONE
College requires change.

HALEY
You can say that again. They stuck me with a roommate that likes to cut her toe nails over the carpet, and let me clue you in, she doesn’t pick them up.

SIEMONE
Did you try to change roommates?

HALEY
Hell ya! But the only place open was with some nerd with more pimples than a golf ball.

CANDACE
Dimples, a golf ball has dimples.

HALEY
Whatever. No way I’m going to share a room with a guy who believes they actually landed on the moon. Come on, everyone knows they shot that stuff in Hollywood. Please.
TAMIKA
Why don’t you tell us about your grades.

HALEY
Oh, I’m all over grades. I mean, I own a solid two point six. I know that sounds low, but it’s not about grades, right? It’s about learning, and I’ve learned plenty.

SIEMONE
What about your extra-curriculars? How do you spend your time?

HALEY
I like to watch TV in the lounge. Did you know how many guys the bachelorette turned down? Hunks too.

TAMIKA
Do you date?

HALEY
Of course, I date, although I have to say the quality of men on this campus is ridiculously low—specially athletes. What’s up with them?

CANDACE
What makes you think you’d be happy here?

HALEY
I’m just like you.

SIEMONE
The average GPA here is three point three.

TAMIKA
A number of our members play a variety of sports at the collegiate level.

CANDACE
We have members in the glee club, African language and culture club, business and law society, college mentors for kids, debate team...
SIEMONE
Environmental health society.

TAMIKA
Feminist student association.

SIEMONE
GLBT support.

TAMIKA
Leadership advisory board.

CANDACE
And many more. So tell us, Haley, how are you like us?

HALEY
All those things are superficial. They aren’t what makes us...us.

SIEMONE
I wish you were serious.

TAMIKA
We all have things to do.

CANDACE
I think we’re done here.

Haley sighs.

HALEY
I would think you would recognize one of your own.

She waves her hand, and a pledge paddle flies off the wall and hits the ping-pong table.

The three girls look at each other.

Then, Siemone nods, and two paddles fly off the wall and land softly on a couch.

Candace claps and a ping-pong paddle jumps into the air. A ball bounces off the table, and the paddle slams it for a winner on the other side.

HALEY
More?
CANDACE

One.

Haley looks around the room. Then she settles on the girls and smiles. She waves, and the Trio rise off the floor till they hover two feet in the air.

With another wave, the Trio settle back down.

Haley stands.

HALEY

Enough?

The girls stand and offer hands.

CANDACE

Welcome to the sisterhood.

FADE OUT.
